<http://www.americanprogress.org/issues/labor/report/2014/04/15/87638/the-economic-importance-of-womens-rising-hours-of-work/>

Over the past three decades, there has been a steady rise in the share of women, especially mothers, in the workforce. As indicated by the data, the majority of women and mothers work, and many work full time and full year. This dramatic increase in women's working hours has had a substantial impact both on household earnings and the economy more generally.

<http://blogs.hbr.org/2014/03/rigid-gender-roles-can-take-a-toll-on-womens-quality-of-life/>

In countries with strict gender roles, women's total work hours tend to increase as they perform more paid labor outside the home. In Spain, for example, women's work at home (housework and child care) declined by only 6 hours per week as their workplace labor increased by 8 hours per week from 2002 through 2010, say Jose Ignacio Gimenez-Nadal of the University of Zaragoza in Spain and Almudena Sevilla of Queen Mary University of London in the UK. The result is that Spanish women lost 2 hours of weekly leisure time over that period. A decline in leisure hours suggests a declining quality of life.

"So-called 'work martyrs' give hundreds of hours in free labor to their employers every year, encouraged by always-on gadgets, work through nights, weekends, and vacations. Trading sleep or fun for unpaid work is obviously a bad deal for employees, but there's a growing body of evidence that even apparently "free" labor might not be a good deal for employers, either."
